Association of Her2/neu gene expression and DNA ploidy with Ki-67 expression in gastric adenocarcinomas. The Her2/neu proto-oncogene product (Her2) has been correlated with tumor progression and metastasis of numerous types of malignant neoplasms. It is, however, not known whether Her2 overexpression and its clinical significance are related to the proliferation status of gastric carcinoma. An immunohistochemical study of Her2 protein expression in 114 gastric adenocarcinomas was performed using a polyclonal anti-Her2 protein antibody and an indirect biotin-streptavidin amplification method. DNA ploidy was analyzed using flow cytometry. MIB-1 monoclonal antibody was used to evaluate the proportion of Ki-67-positive nuclei. Her2 overexpression was detected in 16 of 114 (13.8%) gastric carcinomas. Her2 protein overexpression was associated with larger tumor size, deeper tumor invasion, advanced clinical stage, lymph node metastasis, and distant metastasis. Most of the tumors with a greater than twofold increase in Her2 protein overexpression showed altered DNA ploidy as well. DNA aneuploidy was more commonly found in Her2 overexpressing tumors. Her2 overexpression was more frequent in tumors with a greater than twofold increase in Ki-67 expression. Concomitant Her2 overexpression and an increase in Ki-67 expression were detected in 46% of gastric carcinomas. These results suggest that the Her2 protein is associated with tumor progression and that Her2 overexpression can be correlated with increased cell proliferation in gastric carcinomas.
