In certain instances, maintaining livestock populations will inevitably result in incurring losses. Maintenance of livestock populations is complex, and understanding the dynamics of the population and the processes influencing the livestock population is typically difficult. Precise determination of the state of the livestock population is often difficult because it often involves complicated and expensive biological testing, and precise observation of all factors involved in maintaining livestock populations is difficult, if not impossible. Without such precise information, many steps in maintaining livestock populations is often imprecise, subject to human error, and expensive. In addition, livestock populations are likely to increase and decrease over time, subject to unpredictable factors. For these and other reasons, current livestock management is often inefficient and costly.Gymnastics at the 1999 Summer Universiade The gymnastics competition at the 1999 Summer Universiade was held in the National Gymnastics Arena in Birmingham, England. Men's and women's artistic individual all-around, team and rhythmic individual and team all-around events were contested. China won all of the titles
