Condemnation of the war in Iraq is on the rise. The number of those who do not support it is rising. In our normally civil society, that is not acceptable. n. Bush Jr.: The President of the United States has the prerogative to wage war if he believes he has the intelligence to do so. He does have that prerogative. But he also has the obligation to be as honest and as straight forward about the reasons for his actions as possible. He has failed to meet that obligation. o. It is not the role of this citizen to tell the President of the United States what he should or should not do. That is the prerogative of the President. But his actions and the reasons for them are his to describe. He has failed to meet that obligation. p. We have not become the world's policeman; but our interests and our security are at stake here. We need to enlist the cooperation of other countries because it is not possible for us to do this on our own. We are asking for the support of an international community in this endeavor. The President has not provided that information. He has not been honest with the American people. We need to get that information so we can make decisions as to how best to go about protecting our national interests and our security interests. q. A month ago, we were asked, "Should we support this war?" We answered that question. A month later, we are being asked, "Now we are asking you to support the war?" Answering that same question again just creates confusion. That's not fair 595f342e71
