A: it's not your problem, it's mine. I have no clue why it blocks this file - I even tried a fresh download & installed. WTF. I tried both google chrome & firefox - different versions. It works if I click on "download as" option and save it on my desktop. Proof that it's my fault - the file is there on my desktop, but it doesn't work on my laptop. Removing the exe-part from the URL manually & running it in my laptop fixed it. This may be a bug - you can have a look on stackexchange.com and file a ticket - maybe some experts will come up with something. When I asked on stackexchange about it, I got this quick response "it's an anti-screenshot / anti-keylogger so it doesn't work on all the computer. it's a common piece of software to block it". I didn't want to spend too much time on it so I removed the exe-part - it's not very efficient but it's the only solution I found. If anyone has something more to say about it, feel free to comment or open a new question.

Short-term outcomes of penetrating keratoplasty and different techniques in patients with herpetic keratitis. To evaluate the short-term outcomes of penetrating keratoplasty (PKP) in patients with herpetic keratitis and to compare outcomes with different techniques in PKP. A retrospective evaluation of the clinical records of 76 eyes of 66 patients with herpetic keratitis who underwent PKP was performed. The rate and features of recurrence and graft rejection were evaluated. Recurrence of herpetic keratitis and graft rejection rates after PKP were investigated. Mean follow-up was  $32.5 \pm 9.3$  months. Recurrence was detected in 43 (56.5%) eyes. The recurrence rate of HSV-1 keratitis was significantly higher than that of HSV-2 keratitis ( $P = 0.03$ ). The graft rejection rate was high in all eyes (27.1%). Preoperative intraocular pressure  $>23$  mmHg and Fc rejection were significantly associated with graft rejection ( $P = 0.03$  and  $P$
