The effects of injection of isotonic NaCl solutions into osmotically stressed rats on the diurnal variations in tissue binding of [3H]T4 was studied. The increase in [3H]T4 binding to various tissues over the diurnal period was abolished if the injections were given 1 hr before the animals were killed (peak binding occurring 3-6 hr after the injection). Injection of isotonic NaCl also caused a marked fall in the concentrations of serum T3, T4, and TSH and a reduction of the intracellular [3H]T4 and its nuclear associated binding sites. Treatment of the rats with triiodothyronine (T3) 6 hr before the injection of isotonic NaCl was able to reverse the hypothyroid effects of the injections. These data show that
