It is not necessary that the Plaintiff or his attorney have physical possession of the check to apply for and obtain a refund. "Receipt" is to be interpreted broadly and literally, provided the recipient has actual knowledge that the check has been deposited for collection. Since the Plaintiff had received by mail the notification that the check had been rejected, he has perfected a demand under the statute even though he did not have physical possession of the check. R. 28(j) Ex. A at 7-9 (footnote omitted). The popularity of golf as a sport has exploded in recent years. Several factors have contributed to the increased popularity, including the lower cost of golf as compared to other sports such as tennis, the ease of access and facilities available to most, and the accessibility and attractiveness of the outdoors. Add to this list the accessibility to public courses, and there are more opportunities to enjoy the game than ever before. The number of public courses has increased in the past several years, but there are, of course, a greater number of private courses as well. All courses are designed to provide entertainment, challenge, and a distraction from the daily routine in one's life. The skills necessary to play a course, and the skill level required to achieve consistent play, are the same no matter what the course. Many times, the focus of a player of the game is on the game of the individual. For instance, some golfers may have a better swing than others, while others may have a better short game. For instance, a golfer who has a great drive and fairway wood, may not have a good putter. Indeed, while a player may have developed some skills, as described above, he may still be hitting the ball further off the fairway and into the rough, than he should. Typically, the player of the game is focused on his swing, and he may not even be aware of his putting. There are some types of golf training devices which attempt to monitor and improve a player's performance. For instance, U.S. Pat. No. 6,047,669
