They were almost unfathomable in their intensity: bursts of fire, people screaming. Iona, an aid worker who lives in Bangladesh's Cox's Bazar refugee camp, was alerted to the noise. "I got out and I saw three women running for their lives," says the 28-year-old Australian, who moved to Cox's Bazar last year to work with the camp's 70,000 Rohingya refugees. As he ran towards the sound of the fire, one of the women collapsed at his feet. "I'd never seen anything like that," says Mardini. Over the last year and a half, the deaths of civilians in the conflict have been commonplace. On average, two civilians were killed every day, according to the latest figures provided by Bangladesh's government. But, on a single night earlier this month, more than 30 people were murdered in a single incident. They were the victims of a mass shooting, carried out by suspected Islamist militants. The attackers - accused of being part of the Rohingya armed group known as the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA
